

We asked our students how living at University Hall has helped their university journey:

“I had originally lived out of home for about two and a half years before University Hall. It was a big change-up for me because for the first time in a while I felt like I had people around me that were there to help me take care of myself. Things like going to class, doing chores, making sure I had enough to eat; there were people invested in making sure I wasn't struggling with independent living. There's so much convenience. College is a big surprise, give it a week and you'll fall in love with this place.”

RAFE, FROM TOODYAY

“I think college helped me greatly with university. College helps with shaping your experiences a lot. You're so close to university and you don't need to worry about amenities because you have access to almost everything here. It makes it so easy to make friends here too, because college helped to make the process of making friends a lot less intimidating for me. You have Welcome Week to get to know everybody before uni and because everyone is in the same boat, you all have similar shared experiences. If I was living with someone away from university by myself, it definitely would have been a lot harder.”
